How did the fund perform last year?

In the six-month period from December 1, 2023, to May 31, 2024, the Zacks Small-Cap Core Fund Investor Class yielded a return of +15.97%, outperforming the benchmark Russell 2000 Index by 1.54%. Our allocation decisions within the Small Cap Core Fund drove relative outperformance of +1.18%, while stock selection detracted slightly.

The top-performing sector in the Small-Cap Core Fund during the performance period was Producer Durables, which rose +30.92%. The Utilities sector dragged on total return, as the elevated interest rate environment has had outsized impact on smaller Utilities that tend to carry higher debt loads—at a time when more investment in grid modernization is needed.

For much of the six-month performance period, investors remained most enthusiastic about mega-cap growth companies, particularly in the Technology sector. However, as the U.S. economy continues to expand and earnings growth extends beyond Technology companies and the AI-boom—which we expect to see in the second half of 2024—small-cap companies could experience a positive rotation. Small-caps currently trade at far lower valuations than their large-cap peers, which we believe could present strong opportunities looking forward.

From a pure valuation standpoint, high-quality small-cap stocks trade at a historically large discount to their large-cap peers, even though many of them have similar profit margins and free cash flows. Indeed, over the past decade, small- and mid-cap companies have grown earnings—on average—faster than their large-cap peers. For small caps, stock price appreciation over that time has lagged their large-cap peers but has also been driven far more by earnings growth than multiple expansion.
